2020-2021

COVID-19 Response

With flexibility and support, music education can continue in either a traditional manner with modifications, a hybrid face-to-face/virtual mode, or a fully on-line.

Music education can and will play an important part in social healing, improving school morale, and sustaining community support.

Music education can and will play a large role in keeping students engaged in schools and moving towards graduation.

Music performances are both possible and desirable by individual performers, small ensembles and modified large ensembles while adhering to safety guidelines.

Now is the time to move forward rather than backwards with music learning opportunities in our schools.

Communities will continue to expect and appreciate the active participation of school music performing groups in local events and activities.

Music educators can and will overcome all obstacles and challenges when given the opportunity to teach, lead and innovate.

Music educators are essential educators.
